What is "World Water Day"?

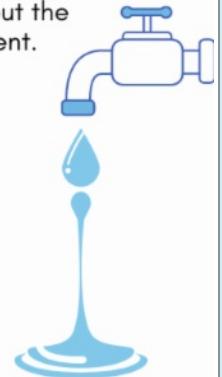

In 1992 the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development wanted to create awareness about the burdens that 3rd world countries carry when it comes to accessible drinking water and wastewater treatment.

What is 2021's Focus?

Every year the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development concentrates their water studies in one area for World Water Day. This year, they have spotlighted "the link between climate change and water, and the important role people must play to protect our water resources." With globally rising temperatures, being driven by natural and man-made causes, the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development wanted to bring to light the impact that climate change has on our eco-system.

What Can I do to Help?

Part of World Water Day is for the consumer to be aware of water issues locally and globally. One way you can start your local search is by finding out where your home's water comes from, how it's been treated, and is it safe to consume. Upon your findings, you may want to share them with your neighbors and educate them on the local water quality and availability.

In an effort to help decrease the spread of germs, be sure to wash your hands frequently when touching/preparing food, going to the bathroom, and when you get a cut, just to name a few. Furthermore, be sure to turn off the water while not in use to help conserve water in your area.

LAST NOTES

Even though it's a bigger business you still get the small business customer service. I've never had any complaints with anyone that I've dealt with from my regional office. I recommend them to all my friends looking for a water softener. They'll even deliver the salt and load it in your drum for you!
